Why is my gas dryer not drying my clothes

10/11/2011 11:48 AM

We haven't used our dryer in years. Literally, years. During the winter, we hang our clothes to dry on lines that run the length of our basement. During the spring, summer, and fall, our clothes are dried and freshened by Ma Nature.We've loved the energy savings, the fact that we are lessening our impact on the environment, and the clean way our clothing smells -- no overpowering fabric softener smell here! But I have to admit that I, especially, love hanging clothes outdoors on the lines, feeling the warm sun and gentle breeze as I smooth and clip towels, t-shirts, and jeans onto the lines.Your clothes will dry on the line. That's nature. But there are a few little tricks to line drying that will make the process run even more smoothly.Tips for Line Drying Your ClothesI often hear people complain that when they line dry their clothing (especially jeans and towels), it ends up stiff and scratchy. Using just a half to three-quarters of a cup of vinegar per load, added just before your rinse cycle starts, will keep your clothing soft. Don't worry about any vinegar odor -- it disappears as the clothing dries.This prevents weird bunching at the shoulders, which is a pain to get out after the shirt is dry. Use two clothespins at the hem instead, and you won't have to worry about bunchy shoulders.Use clothespins, and clip all of your clothes to the line. Folding results in longer drying times and fold lines in weird places once your clothes have dried.If you're like me, you just want to get the laundry done as quickly as possible, and you might, maybe, sometimes do larger loads than you have room to hang. Resist the temptation, and give your clothing room on the lines. Crowding results in wrinkles and longer drying times, as well as weighing down the line (which could make your clothes drag on the ground.)If you have an item that you've worn, but isn't exactly dirty, go ahead and hang it out on the line to let it air out. For even more freshening power, make an all natural linen spray, spritz the item, and let it dry. Double energy savings! Line drying is easy, effective, and (dare I say it?) enjoyable. I hope these tips help make laundry day a little simpler. Wrong. This month's Frugal $ense winner proves that you can still dry your clothes the old-fashioned way with a little ingenuity and an extra shower rod. She's able to use her dryer less, thereby saving some electricity, and her clothes come out just fine. February's Frugal $ense winner: Lynn Bulmahn Lynn Bulmahn won $100 for submitting the following tip. Save when you dry clothes "I put my clothes in the dryer only for about 10 to 20 minutes before removing them. This gets out most of the wrinkles and excess water. Then I hang up the garments on plastic coat hangers and hang these up on a rod over my bathtub. I took a second shower curtain rod and placed it in my guest bathroom, installing it over the tub. I used a coat hanger to measure where I wanted it, and installed it about half a coat-hanger's width from the back wall of the tub, allowing a couple of inches more (so the damp clothing never touches the wall). That rod is where I hang the clothes right after I take them out of the dryer. If there are any drips, the water drips into the tub and goes right down the drain. I leave the clothes there until they are completely dry, then transfer the clothes to my closet. Doing this not only saves electricity but also saves my clothes and T-shirts from shrinking in the dryer. It prolongs the life of my dryer appliance and my garments. If you live in an apartment complex, your bathroom is a great place to dry clothes because then no one can swipe them." — Lynn Bulmahn of Waco, TexasRead more tipsSubmit your tip Bankrate.com: How long have you been doing this? Lynn Bulmahn: Since I was in college — I won't say how many years ago that was — at what used to be called Southwest Texas State University (it's now Texas State University at San Marcos), in one of the dorms. They put up two towel bars in the shower ... so the water (from the clothes) drips down into the bathtub. I said, "Hey, that's a great idea." I've used the idea ever since. Bankrate.com: So are you using the shower rod that's already in the guest bathroom? Lynn Bulmahn: If you rent an apartment, they often won't have a built-in shower rod. (You have to buy one.) So when you move out of the apartment, just take it with you. I brought the tension rod with me from my last apartment. Bankrate.com: Your clothes don't get static? Lynn Bulmahn: (Putting clothes in the dryer) takes the wrinkles out. It has a setting called "wrinkle release." It runs for 10 to 15 minutes. If it didn't have that, I'd still put the clothes in for 10 to 15 minutes. Most of the time the clothes don't even drip. Bankrate.com: Do you have any other tips on saving money or being frugal? Lynn Bulmahn: If you have a clean beach towel, throw that in the dryer with clothes to help dry them all the way. It soaks up some of the moisture so the dryer can go a little faster. You can also spin the washer a second time, not a rinse but just a spin.When you have cold weather, put the washer on the spin cycle so you can get all of the water out of the thing so it doesn't freeze — not where it spins with water, but at the very end of the cycle. You want to get all of the water out of the hoses and pipes. You don't want to ruin your machine. why isn't my gas dryer drying my clothes. why isn't my dryer drying my clothes. why is my dryer not drying my clothes completely. why is the dryer not drying my clothes
